The number of people visiting museums and galleries varies from year to year, and in this report it will be described, according to the collected data, how the attendance depends on different features.

It can be noticed that a substantial amount of visitors prefer going to the museums that do not take any admission fees. For instance, in 2015, after Natural History Museum and Science Museum both introduced admission charges, their attendance seemed to draw on for 4.6 mln visits. Meanwhile the number of visitors of three other museums and galleries grew almost respectively.

With knowledge based on the data it can be stated that people start rating the importance of culture in a very high way. Comparing visits to national museums and galleries in England for three separate years, it turns out that they have grown from 13.7 mln in 2013 to 16.1 mln visits in 2017 in total.

To increase people's attendance of museums and galleries it would be proper to shorten the admission charges if possible, because some potential visitors may not be able to pay for the entrance. Also, spreading informations about interesting exhibitions in schools, universities or colleges will probably have influence on the number of visits. Moreover, it might be necessary to open some cafeterias in museums so the visitors would not need to leave for lunch and stay inside.

To make ^{All in all} ~~an appeal~~, I'd like to say that we must do everything to involve people into arts, history and science, because it is an important part of every person's life.
