While our museums and galleries certainly are substantial to our culture, there is a number of improvements which could be done to increase the attendance rate of these establishments.

According to the chart, most of these establishments are growing in the number of visits. However, there is a worrying drop of interest in some of them. This drop of attendance is caused by the introduction of admission charges prior to 2014. It is worth mentioning that the establishments which have remained free of charge, on the other hand, are shown to attract more visitors every year.

Given that the board of directors is to follow the recommendations below, the attendance rate will certainly increase. It is, without a doubt, obvious that the introduction of the admission charges greatly affected the number of visits in two certain museums (Natural History Museum and Science Museum respectively). If this change is beyond question, it is recommended to implement various rewards to visitors. Other option being an implementation of a "free admission" days. These recommendations are focused more on the public appeal rather than benefit. Moreover, I do believe these changes will draw on more visitors than more profit loss.

In conclusion, it is evident that the chargeable entry is not an option. At least not in the current state. These changes will, hopefully, bring only benefit.
