The aim of this report is to describe the attendance of some main British museums and galleries over the past couple of years.

First of all, I would like to briefly depict all the gathered data. Mostly, the number of visitors increased, we can see that culture began to appeal people more. Also we can say that museums overall are more popular than galleries. Furthermore, people do not like to pay for a ticket, we can conclude that judging on Natural History Museum and Science Museum rate drop.

Secondly, I will analyze and parallel exact museums and galleries. Let's compare two most attended places - British Museum and National Gallery. They have 5.6 million and 4.8 million visitors respectively (as for 2017). ~~and~~ Both have experienced attendance rise, but now the museum has surpassed gallery for almost million visitors, even though in 2013 their numbers of visitors were practically the same. What about museums, that introduced admission charges? Their fate is upsetting. As soon as ~~they~~ admission charges were introduced, the museums lost almost 2 million visitors. Therefore, we can say that interest in nature and science isn't substantial.

Lastly, I would like to suggest some of my thoughts on increasing people's attendance of museums and galleries. I would offer investing in advertisement and try to draw on people's attention. Besides, I would make admission charges lower than they are now, because people don't seem like they are going to spend money.

To sum up, I would like to say that some minor changes would affect effectively on the number of attenders, increase museums popularity and make people more educated.
